PREFACE

The cuneiform texts published in this volume were copied and autographed during my stay in Philadelphia in the winter of 1913–1914. Nearly all of them are letters belonging to the time of the so-called first Babylonian or Ḫammurapi dynasty (2225–1926 B. C.).

There are only two (or three) exceptions: the first is an Assyrian abît šarrim (No. 132), addressed to a certain Ardi-Gula. This man seems to be identical with Ardi-Gula of the letter H (=Harper, Assyrian letters), No. 117, mentioning Ašur-bân-apli and Šamaš-šum-ukîn (l. 5), by which fact the time of our letter is determined. The other exception is a cone of King Ḫammurapi, about 17, 3 cm. high, having an inscription as well on the shaft as on the base. Both inscriptions are (as far as they are preserved) identical, though it may be possible, that the inscription on the base[1] was not quite as long as that on the shaft. This text of King Ḫammurapi, mentioning the building of the (or a) wall of Sippar, is especially interesting by the fact that it is the only official inscription before the time of the king's great victory over Rîm-Sin. For a transcription and translation see pp. 30 ff. A third exception may be the letter No. 29, the writing of which might suggest some time at the end of the Ḫammurapi dynasty; but as well the word ia-a-nu-um, hitherto never found in texts of that period, as the mentioning of the city of Lubdi[1], are in favor for a later (Cassite) time. Unfortunately the letter is too badly preserved to settle the question definitely.

Most of the letters published in this volume have been purchased by the Museum from dealers; only the first twenty-nine texts were found during the excavations of the University of Pennsylvania in Nippur. The publication of all these texts had been assigned by the former editor of the Babylonian Expedition, Dr. H. V. Hilprecht, to Dr. A. T. Clay. But the latter very kindly ceded his rights to the present writer and even gave him about twenty copies previously made by him which could be utilized during the preparation of this work. I beg to offer my sincerest thanks to Professor A. T. Clay for his kindness. My thanks are also due to Dr. G. A. Barton, who gave some old Babylonian letters over to me which had been assigned to him. In this way practically the whole amount of old Babylonian letters, preserved in the Museum, could be included in the present volume[2]: only those not yet cleaned and repaired and some assigned to Dr. A. Poebel which could not be obtained for this collection were not made use of. I even published those letters which were very badly damaged as every little piece of information we can get from the classical

[1] This city also occurs in the Cassite letter No. 99 (l. 6) of Radau's collection (BE, XVII, 1) who, however, read $^{\hat{a}lu}$Lu-ub-di-shá^{ki} (p. 153) instead of $^{\hat{a}lu}$Lu-up-di šá ki-[. . . .].

[2] Letter No. 37 published by H. Ranke in BE, VI, 1, No. 32, has been repeated here, especially as the interesting seal inscription was omitted in the first publication.

time of the Babylonian language seems to be worth while publishing.

The letters bought from dealers came from the same source as the contracts published by Dr. H. Ranke and Dr. A. Poebel in BE, VI, 1 and 2 (second part), i.e., Sippar in North Babylonia. It is, of course, often very difficult to determine the place of such a letter by internal evidence only, and it may even be the case that one or the other of them was picked up at another tell; but, on the other hand, these letters are so similar to other letters found at Sippar and so different from those found at Nippur that we may consider their origin as fairly certain.

An attempt has been made to give the letters of the two sections of this volume in historical order. As nearly always internal evidence is the only guide, such an arrangement cannot be considered as absolutely correct, though, on the other hand, the character of the writing and the formulæ of the introduction give some evidence at least for the arrangement. Quite unique are those few letters which mention the king's name in the introductory formula, i.e., No. $75_{,7\,f.}$:

> šú-lum-ka ma-ḫar ^{ilu}šamaš ^{ilu}marduk ù be-lí-ia am-mi-di-ta-na | lu da-ri "may thy welfare be lasting before Šamaš, Marduk and my lord Ammiditana,"

and No. $90_{,10\,f.}=91_{,9\,f.}$:

> šú-lum-ka ma-ḫar ^{ilu}šamaš ^{ilu}marduk | ù be-lí-ia am-mi-ṣa-du-ga | lu da-ri

There are a few other letters the time of which is determined by a date, namely No. 37 (23d(?) year of Ḫammurapi) and No. 89 (13th or 17th + a year of Ammisaduga). The latter is especially interesting, because it is expressly called a copy (meḫir, l. 42) of a letter which was sent by Ibni-Sin and the judges of Sippar-Amnanum to the king.[1] Another letter mentioning Ḫammurapi (No. $83_{,1,7}$) is only furnishing us with a terminus post quem. The oldest letter in the collection is probably No. 1, a case-tablet with remarkable seal impressions.[2]

The writing of the letters found at Nippur might, at the first glance, suggest that they are much older than they really are. But when we compare for instance those four letters addressed to the same person Lugâ (No. 5–8) we will find young and old forms of signs even in the same letter which fact clearly shows that the old forms are merely artificial ones. As it is very probable that Agûa or Agûḫa mentioned in No. $9_{,1}$ and $10_{,13}$ is identical with Agûa mentioned in contracts found at Nippur and dated in the time of Rîm-Sin[3] and Samsuïluna,[4] and that Nanna-šalasir, the writer of No. 9 is identical with the witness in BE, VI, 2, No. $51_{,13}$ (time of Samsuïluna), it is at least probable that most of the letters found at Nippur belong to the reigns of Rîm-Sin or Ḫammurapi and Samsuïluna. More exact dates are unfortunately not obtainable.

As I am going to give full transcriptions and translations of [1] There can be little doubt that bêlu means "king" in this letter. That this bêlu (bêli, bêlni) was the official address of the king is shown by quotations given in various letters written by the kings themselves; cf. BB, 43 (l. 13, bêli my lord = Ḫammurapi); BB, 49 (l. 10, 14, bêli = Ḫammurapi); BB, 51 (l. 5, bêli = Ḫammurapi); BB, 63 (l. 10 ff. bêlini = Samsuïluna); BB, 70 (l. 10, bêlni = Abiešuḫ); BB, 88 (l. 9, bêlni = Samsuditana).

[2] Cf. the photographic reproduction on pl. XCVII. The case could not be removed without destroying it. Therefore, the letter was not opened.

all these letters in the second part of my "Babylonische Briefe"[1] I will only give a few interesting specimens in the introduction of this volume together with the translation of the remarkable cone of King Ḫammurapi.

My thanks are due to the University of Pennsylvania and especially to Provost Dr. Edgar F. Smith, who enabled me to spend the winter in Philadelphia, and also to the Director of the Museum, Dr. George B. Gordon, for his indefatigable assistance during the preparation of this work.

INTRODUCTION

The letters published in this volume may be divided into official and private letters. Official letters are those which are either written by or to a king or high official. There are no letters in our collection written by any king of the Ḫammurapi dynasty, but there are several official letters which may be considered as addressed to a king. As we mentioned in the Preface,[1] the usual address to the king is simply bêlu (ana bêliḫa); but from this fact we are not allowed to infer that every letter having the formula ana bêliḫa is addressed to a king. When we consider letters like BB No. 235, which is addressed ana bêliḫa, we certainly do not get the impression that the addressee is the king. There are furthermore a good many letters written by women ana bêliḫa: in this case it is very probable that bêlu simply means the husband.[2] In most of the cases, it is therefore quite impossible to say whether a letter addressed ana bêliḫa is written to the king or another high official. Only the contents may give some information in one or the other direction.

OFFICIAL LETTERS

A good specimen of this class is No. 89 of our collection dated in the time of King Ammisaduga.[1] It is written by a certain Ibni-[...] and the judges of Sippar-Amnanum. As several of the letters of King Ammisaduga are addressed to a certain Ibni-Sin, a high official of Sippar[2], it is very probable that the name broken in our letter has to be supplied as Ibni-[Sin]. The letter is unfortunately damaged, but we can recognize that it is concerned with a reproach of the king to the high officials of Sippar for not having given certain taxes to a tax collector[3] of Babylon sent by the king. As we mentioned before, the letter is no original but a copy that had been preserved in the archives of Sippar. It runs as follows.

Another letter sent by Ibni-Sin and the judges of Sippar is No. 102 which is unfortunately badly preserved and carelessly written, many signs and even whole lines (26, 27) being erased. This fact shows that this letter, too, is not the original sent ana bêlini,[1] but a rough draft from which the official letter was copied. This draft was then preserved in the archives of Sippar. The letter runs as follows.

Several letters the envelop of which probably had the address ana bêliia have no introduction at all. One of the most interesting texts of this kind is No. 119, bringing a law-case of a certain Išme-Adad against his brother Muḫaddûm before the king. The writer is not mentioned in the text: probably he was a high official (šâpiru?) at the place where the wronged man was living. The letter runs as follows.

TRANSLATION

[1] Išme-Adad, son of Igmil-Sin, [thy] servant, [2] has spoken to me as follows: thus he (has said): [3] "One female slave belonging to those of my father's house [4] I and my brothers [5] had given to a merchant for silver. [6] Silver for her we had received. [7] That slave from the merchant [8] I myself had released [and] [9] a sealed document concerning her [I have] taken. [10] For ten years [11] that slave [is living] at my house: [12] my brothers did not claim her. [13] Now, Muḫaddûm, [a brother of mine], [15] has taken [14] that slave [at another] place [15] for himself."

[16]Thus he has spoken to me. [17] [That man] Išme-Adad

[18] is now coming into the presence of my lord. [19] My lord may hear it from his own lips; [20] his sealed documents he may look at. [21] Against Muḫaddûm [22] he may give orders [that] [23] they shall give back the slave to him (i.e., Išme-Adad).

[24] Išme-Adad, thy servant, [26] may pray [25] before Šamaš for the sake of my lord! [27] My lord, in welfare and health [28] enter into the city of Babylon, and then [29] may the splendid revelation of Marduk who loves thee [30] and of Adad, who has created thee, give their benedictions unto thee!

Other letters addressed ana bêliia are Nos. 63, 78, 103, 104, and probably the mutilated texts Nos. 29, 30, 62, 72, 130. Some others having no introduction (Nos. 82, 83, 84, 88, 123, 129) probably had the address ana bêliia on the envelop.

Another kind of official letters are those addressed ana šâpiriia "to my governor." The position of such a šâpiru may best be understood from the text BB, 238 (=CT, IV, 1, 2). In our collection only the badly preserved text No. 70 has the address ana šâpiriia.

Some of the letters addressed ana awêlim may be classed under the heading "official letters" (Nos. 66, 68, 69, 75, 76, 77(?), 90–96, 98–101, 111(?)), though it is quite certain that awêlu simply is an honorific title like Sir, Esquire or German "Hochwohlgeboren." As an example we may give No. 90.

[7] The god who guards thee, [8] may lift up [7] thy head to happiness! [9] I am sending now (to inquire) after thy welfare: [10] may thy welfare [12] be perpetual [10] before Šamaš, Marduk [11] and my lord Ammisaduga!

[13] As to the case of Sin-rîmêni [14] and Ibni-Adad, his brother, [15] which [16] I have investigated [15] in Sippar-Jaḫrurum and thereupon [17] had caused them to draw up a sealed document of their treaty, [20] you had sealed (the document) [18] with the seal of the priest of the god Šamaš, the priest of the goddess Aya [19] and your seals. [21] The sealed document of that treaty [22] had that man Sin-rîmêni received. [23] After that man Sin-rîmêni [24] had gone to his destiny (i.e., died), [25] Ibni-Adad, his brother, [26] raised claims against the house of Sin-rîmêni. [27] If one is doubting the seal of the priest of Šamaš, the priest of Aya [28] and your seals, [29] whose seal should be accepted! [31] Let them bring before thee [30] that man Ibni-Adad: [32] give orders against him! [33] An oath shall be put on his lips, that [35] he will raise no claims [34] against the house of Sin-rîmêni, his brother.

PRIVATE LETTERS

Like all old-Babylonian letters the letters referring to private affairs are very important from the linguistic point of view. Rare words and forms occur which can not be found in any historical or religious texts. The Babylonian Grammar especially benefits by the great number of verbal forms of the second person of which those of the plural are the most interesting ones. The rule, established by the present writer,[1] that the ending of the second person of the plural is a and not u, even when it is masculine, is confirmed throughout these letters. There is also a new example of a letter addressed to two women giving a number of those exceedingly rare forms of the second person of the feminine plural. As only one letter so far is known,[2] besides that in our collection (No. 51), we will give this specimen here in transcription and, as far as it is possible, in translation, too.

[1] To Kakâ and Mirsiya [2] speak: [3] thus (says) Sin-magir. [4] Šamaš may keep you healthy! [5] How is it possible,[1] [6] that for a (whole) month [7] you have not sent [6] anybody to me because of the provisions for the journey..... [7] and in order to inquire after my welfare!

[8] Now I am despatching Šamaš-êpiri [9] to you: [10] 1/10 kur of barley flour and 1/30 kur of bean flour [11] send to me! [12] It is wanted for some purpose with me. [13] A female servant [14] may come to me, and then I shall send thee[2] (silver).[3] Thereupon [15] give (the flour) immediately and [16] what you will have sent to me [18] take off [17] from your own tithe. [18] The rest [20] send to me [19] according to what I shall write to you.

[1] Very doubtful; there may have been, at this place, a form belonging to the root נטה.
[2] Instead of "you"!
[3] Omitted by the scribe?

Among the letters referring to business transactions we may select two dealing with the same affair, viz., the famous Luštamar-letters. Both of them (Nos. 46 and 47) were enclosed in envelops which were opened, so that the letters could be read. Their having being preserved together with the envelops is an indication that they were copies kept in the archives. Both envelops are sealed: No. 46 with the seal of a certain Warad-Sin (though the writer is a certain Sin-rîmêni), No. 47 with the seal of the writer Ilušu-bâni, son of Ibi-Ilabrat, known also from the Sippar-texts BE, VI, 2, No. 72, l. 3 (21st year of Ḫammurapi) and BE, VI, 1, No. 50 a: 19 and b: 19 (2d year of Samsuiluna). The last text also mentions a brother of his Sin-rîmêni (50 b: 19) who may be identical with the writer of letter No. 46.

Both letters deal with transgressions of the nipûtu-right. As we know from the code of Ḫammurapi (§§ 114ff.), a man who had certain claims against another was allowed to take away a slave or even a free person from the household of his debtor, in order to have this person work for him. Such a person was called nipûtu (pl. nipâtu). Evidently Luštamar had taken such a nipûtu from the daughters of a certain Iasi-ili, though his claims already had been satisfied. We read:

[1] To Lugâ [2] speak: [3] thus (says) Sin-puṭram: [4] Enlil and NIN.IB may keep thee healthy! [5-7] Lugatum had fetched his oxen to the town of Dimtu, in order to till a field of sesame. Thereupon [8] Ubar-Lulu followed him: [9] one ox of his died; therefore [10] they came into my presence for judgment. Then [11] the herdsmen, who had helped him, I asked and [12] they spoke as follows: [13] "The ox went aside in order to eat grass; [14] [he fell] down and died."

[15] Thus I (replied): [16] ["To] Nippur to the city of the judges [17] ye must go; then [18] they will render you a judgment."

[19] In Nippur the judges rendered a judgment to them: [20-21] they assigned Ubar-Lulu to the Garden Gate for an oath. [22-23] Lugatum has not accepted that judgment. [24] [Inquire] into his matter, [in order that] [25] he may not suffer any damage.

A NEW INSCRIPTION OF ḪAMMURAPI

The cone published here as an appendix (No. 133 = pl. CIII f.) belongs to the oldest collections of the Museum. That this inscription was written during Ḫammurapi's earlier reign,[1] is shown by the fact that the king does not call himself šar kibrat arba'im "king of the four quarters of the world."[2] It refers to the building of the wall of Sippar, certainly the same operation which was celebrated by the naming of the king's 25th year: mu bád ẓimbir^{ki} "year in which the wall of Sippar (was finished)." This building operation probably was begun in the king's 23d year: mu apin bád ẓimbir^{ki} "year in which the foundation of the wall of Sippar (was laid)." Therefore the whole work took about two years.

The walls of Sippar again collapsed during the last years of the king's reign. He therefore had built them anew and this operation is mentioned in the inscriptions of the British Museum No. 12212 and 12216[3] in which the king is called šar kibrat arba'im (l. 4). The same operation was celebrated by naming the king's 43d year mu ẓimbir^{ki} "year of Sippar."

The inscription published in this volume runs as follows:

[1] When Šamaš, [2] the great lord [3] of heaven and earth, [4] the king of the gods, [8] had joyfully [9] looked upon [6] me, [5] Ḫammurapi, [6] the prince, his favorite, [7] with his shining face, [12] (when) he had presented to me [10] an everlasting kingdom, [11] a reign of long time, [16] (when) he has established [13] the foundation of the land [14] which, in order to rule, [15] he had given to me, [21] (when he), with his pure mouth, [22] which cannot be altered, had given orders [20] to let live [17] the people of Sippar [18] and Babylon [19] in a peaceful habitation, [27] he truly commanded me [26] in a great fashion [24] to make [23] the wall of Sippar [25] (and) to lift its head.

[28] At that time have I, [29] Ḫammurapi, [30] the mighty king, [31] the king of Babylon, [32] the sublime, the obedient (worshipper) of Šamaš, [33] the favorite of Aya, [34] who makes rejoice the heart [35] of Marduk, his lord, I, [36-37] with the high strength [38] that Šamaš gave to me, [39] by means of the rising [40] of the folk of my land, [41] as to the foundations of the wall of Sippar, [42] in clay [43] like a great mountain [44] I have lifted their head. [45] A great wall I built. [46] What since the oldest times [47] no king among the kings [48] had made, [49] to Šamaš, my lord, [50] in a great fashion I made for him.

[51] That wall [55] has the name: [52] By the command of Šamaš [53] may Ḫammurapi [54] not have any adversaries!

[56] During my splendid reign [57] which Šamaš had pronounced, [58] Sippar, [59] the everlasting city..[.....], [60] its folk in..[.....] [61] to Šamaš truly [I.....]; [62] its canal truly I dug. [63] For [its] country [64] ever[lasting] water [65] truly I procured. [66] Riches [and abundance] [67] truly I established. [68] For the people of Sippar [69] the best position I truly established. [70] .. [....]..... [.....] [71] ..[....].....[.....]. [72] [That which] [74] was pleasant [72] for the heart of Šamaš, my lord, [73] and of Aya, my mistress, [74] truly I did.

[75] My splendid name [76] daily [77] like a god to be mentioned [78] who, for all times, [79] never will be forgotten, [80] in the mouth of the people [81] truly I have established.
